

Amanda Swanson

Major: Psychology

Amanda Swanson is a double major in Psychology and Biology and has a minor in Spanish. She has been a math tutor and served on the executive boards for several clubs and student organizations. She has been a research assistant in Dr. Reich's NIH supported neuropsychology lab and also worked with Dr. Warner on a senior thesis centered on the relationship between Facebook activities and personality attributes. She has presented her research at several regional conferences. Amanda has been accepted to and will attend the Ph.D. program in Behavioral Neuroscience at the University of Connecticut and plans a future working at an academic research institution.