

Covid: A Year in the Life of a Pandemic

By: Tatiana Mehos

School of Contemporary Arts, Ramapo College of New Jersey, Mahwah, NJ, 07430

As nonessential businesses closed and stay at home orders were set in place, questions and panic set in. Many aisles in grocery stores and drug stores became emptier. Curbside pick up and no contact delivery were introduced by many stores and restaurants. The bottom photo is a train station parking lot on a workday.

Over the course of the last year, seeing loved ones was difficult. Seeing friends and family entailed social distancing and masking up, as it still does a year later. Above is a photo taken by a family member. My grandfather waves to his daughter, granddaughter, and great granddaughter, who he had not seen in eight months.