i. We met with the Provost and one of the topics of our discussion centered around academic discussion panels. It appears that these panels will serve as a platform for faculty members and students to engage in moderated conversations on a wide range of subjects. We discussed the prospect of panels related to health and wellness, and its intersection with social media, given our faculty's expertise in media and social media studies. If you have any innovative ideas or insights to contribute, please don't hesitate to share them here or contact me directly. Our input is instrumental in shaping the direction of these discussion panels, and I hope we can provide ideas for dynamic and thought-provoking discussions!

   c. Alex F-In the past in SGA has anyone thought about Ramapo College Having a 4+3 for law and society Program and a law school? I know this sounds crazy and complex but I was thinking since Ramapo College has a nursing program they should make a law one that would make them more money. A lot of thinking in planning on the Colleges part would have to go into this. Just a thought not a proposal. I think it would be very cool for Ramapo College to have its own law school. It would cost a lot of money and time. This would be a great opportunity and addition to the school and would add another to the 5 already existing. It would add more majors and minors and concentrations. It would be cool if they could also make a law and Society Masters. There would be a total of 6 schools. It could be called Ramapo College School Of Law. There could be better networking opportunities to connect law school students with law firms to get them their first job. Law school is usually 90 credits, while undergrad is 128 credits or depending on the college, this 7 year program would be made up of 218 credits with a dual degree program. This program would grant students the opportunity to earn their Bachelor Arts Degree and Their Juris Doctor at one college. This program should give students optional choices to submit their LSAT. Any questions?
